Description:

The team will use strategic planning and problem-solving skills to provide solutions to the business case study provided. At state and national level, teams will be presented with an additional element to the scenario that requires revision of their final presentation.

Modification at National Final Competition:

Mr. Anderson found out that some of his employees have been talking negatively about his business to customers and community members. They feel that their voices are not heard and that Mr. Anderson does not know what he is doing. They have been overheard saying that the company will probably go bankrupt, and they will need to find new jobs. Mr. Anderson does feel that one of his weaknesses is gathering and using employee input to help make his business better. How should Mr. Anderson handle the employees talking negatively about the business? What can he do to avoid situations like this in the future? What impact might higher employee satisfaction have on his business?

Modification at National Preliminary Competition:

Mr. Anderson is considering starting a local delivery service from the retail store. He envisions it working like a restaurant that delivers food to local addresses. He feels that he could pay an employee less money to deliver a package than it would take to ship the package. The orders would still come in online and have to be processed and packaged. What do you see as the pros and cons of this model? Do you recommend that Mr. Anderson try this approach?

Initial Case Study

You have been contacted by Mr. Steve Anderson, small business owner, to help him find some creative solutions to the problems he is facing in his business. Mr. Anderson owns a small retail business (Anderson's Retail) that sells items from toys to clothes to office supplies to hardware. His business is located in three small towns throughout the state. His business is well-received by the communities where they are located, but since retailers like Walmart and Amazon have become popular, he has seen a significant drop in his profits.

The company runs under the same name, but each store acts independently of the other. Merchandise is ordered from the supplier separately by all three locations, based on need. Each store has different rules and policies. Each store has a manager who decided when to run sales and clearances when they feel the store could benefit. Mr. Anderson does visit each location at least weekly to check to see how things are being run and help where needed.

Mr. Anderson has had to increase prices due to the lack of profit. He has also had to cut back on employees and charitable donations to schools and community fundraisers. Mr. Anderson even tried to sell product online and ship products to customer homes, but he found that the online sales cost him more money because his online payment provider charges him and packaging his product cost him too much money (i.e. cardboard boxes, packaging material, etc.).

Mr. Anderson feels like he has tried everything possible and is becoming disheartened thinking his business is going to fail. What do you suggest Mr. Anderson do to help his struggling business become profitable again? Consider the following in your presentation.

1. Should Mr. Anderson close a location or even all three stores?
2. What can be done to generate new revenue streams or cut current costs?
3. Is there another model or type of business Mr. Anderson should consider that would not be costly to enter with his current assets?
4. The business locations are all in small towns. What can he do get the community members to want to support his business?
5. Should he relocate his business?
