Case Study

A recent college graduate, Erin Gardner, has been hired as an administrative support professional for Professional Business Associates. This is her first full-time position in a professional business setting. Although Erin is neat and clean, her manner of dress has become a topic of conversation among other employees. Because of today's clothing styles, Erin finds it perfectly acceptable to wear black yoga pants with a dressy shirt and strappy sandals. Sometimes while bending to the lower file cabinets, her shirt will "ride up" above her pants even though she is completely covered when standing and sitting. A fellow employee has complained to you that Erin is allowed to dress in a particular manner while other employees are held to a standard of "traditional" professional dress. At the same time, Erin has brought it to your attention that her co-workers are gossiping about her which is making her uncomfortable.

As a Human Resource Manager, how would you handle this situation? Use your Human Resources Manual as a guide.
