NATIONAL FINAL KEY SCENARIO:

Roger, Sales Manager at Digital Solutions, is on family medical leave (FMLA) for hip replacement surgery. Before his extended leave, he was asked to check in his company laptop and keys to his desk and file cabinets. While Roger is on leave, several concerning issues are discovered.

1. The IT Department identifies emails between Roger and select employees he supervises pointedly asking for any prescription pain medications they may have to help him “make it through until his surgery.”
2. Upon notification of the emails, Roger’s supervisor discovers several bottles of narcotic prescription pain pills in the back of Roger’s desk drawer. None of the bottles have Roger’s name listed on the labels; however, many do contain the names of several current employees in his department.
3. At the same time, the Accounting Department conducts a routine audit and discovers Roger had recorded several “big ticket” sales to select friends and family members and then, once he was paid his commission on these sales, authorized full credit for the items’ return. The audit trail reports this activity began several months before Roger’s surgery, starting with a few small orders and progressively advancing to higher numbers and amounts. These fictitious sales resulted in substantial “unearned” commissions paid to Roger prior to his FMLA leave.
