DESCRIPTION:

NATIONAL PRELIMINARY KEY SCENARIO:

The Marketing Director is currently supervising 20 professionals and 4 support staff. The nature of the work requires a collaborative environment where the professionals provide work direction to the support staff. One professional on your team, Sarah, has started dating a new support staff employee. During the recent company Christmas party, they both had too much to drink, became verbally offensive, and disclosed confidential company information to competing vendors. Although Digital Solutions' policies do not specifically prohibit dating within the company, several co-workers have noted preferential treatment, work assignments, and performance reviews for Sarah's newfound love interest. Others have complained the new relationship is making them feel uncomfortable to the point of asking to be relocated to another department. Some of the reported allegations include the two being too affectionate at work, frequently leaving early for "happy hour," excessive abuse of company time and equipment for their personal benefit, and misusing company financial resources and credit cards for personal (non-company) expenditures including "date night" transportation, gifts, meals, and entertainment.
