NATIONAL FINAL SCENARIO:

The school year was coming to an end and James needed to get a good summer job. Many of his friends had worked as summer interns at Digital Solutions and were then offered full-time, high-paying positions following their graduation from high school. He is aware that Digital Solutions hires a limited number of summer interns and generally favors students with excellent academic records, high standardized test scores, and strong leadership and community service involvement through Career and Technical Student Organizations such as Business Professionals of America. As a result, James decided to “tweak” his resume. He rounded his GPA up from 3.0 to a more respectable 3.5, listed his ACT composite score as 30 instead of the actual score of 24, and “enhanced” his student organization involvement. James reasoned these “minor” changes really didn’t matter as he would show his supervisors at Digital Solutions who he was really was and what he was capable of through both the quality and quantity of the work he would do once he was hired as a summer intern.

- Who and/or what may be impacted by James’ decisions to “tweak” his resume?
- Are there any laws and/or company policies (written or unwritten) that may apply?
- What actions may be taken by Digital Solutions if they discover James’ misrepresentation?
- What do you recommend be done to prevent this situation from reoccurring or to minimize the severity of the consequences?
