STATE FINAL SCENARIO:

You are a supervisor at Digital Solutions. You have an employee who is loyal and does great work and is also a single parent. They have been warned about being tardy to work and excessive absenteeism several times, both verbally and in writing. The last written warning included notice that "further violations could result in disciplinary actions," including suspension or termination.

A short time after the written warning was issued, your employee called work right before their shift began to say they were not going to be in because their babysitter had canceled, and they had no one to care for their young child.

You told them that they had already exceeded the allowed number of absences and warned that if they did not report to work, or find an employee to swap shifts with, they could be suspended without pay or terminated. The employee did not report for their shift, nor did they find an employee to trade shifts with.

How will you handle this situation when the employee returns to work?
